

SINGED WINGS—THE WORLD-OLD STORY OF THE MOTH AND THE CANDLE

Is a Woman Essentially Unmoral Whose Sole Ambition Is to Captivate a Lover, Giving Nothing in Return?

By ELLEN ADAIR

"The older I grow," began the Cynic meditatively, "the while he leaned back in his chair and blew slow wreaths of smoke toward the ceiling. 'The older I grow the more firmly do I become convinced of one fact, and that is that all women are inherently unethical.'"

"Your experience must have been unfortunate," said his friend the Optimist at once. "The women of my acquaintance are nearly all delightful, and every one has principles—of a certain kind."

"The Cynic laughed as one would at the hearing of some child's prattle. 'My good fellow,' said he, 'you are not of what you speak, for you are a real student of human nature! How can you be, when you perambulate in seeing only one side of the picture and that the glorified view?'

"But I know lots of women—" began the other vehemently. "And that's what you certainly do not!" interrupted the Cynic, with more force than grammatical success. "No man on earth ever really knows a woman—and I maintain that the average woman is unmoral."

"The Optimist stared in sheer surprise, but his friend continued imperturbably: 'Yes, I mean just what I say—women are essentially unmoral. Don't confuse the term with 'immoral,' please, for there is certainly a difference, and I should not care to use the latter adjective.'"

"Please explain just what you mean," said the other who continued: "It's just another case of the old, old story which justifies my opinion," said he. "The old story of the moth and the candle. She was a beautiful little candle, and I don't wonder that the moth was attracted, for he was a foolish, simple-minded fellow, and he wasn't accustomed to a brilliant, circulating light. She, on the other hand, she was a friend of mine, and I introduced him to her—she asked me, and I couldn't will refuse."

"Please go on," said the other slowly. "There isn't anything to tell, if you've ever watched the moths around a candle," the Cynic said, "but my friend was no exception to the rule, unless it was that he stung his wings more badly than the" rest. I had to watch the flame go on, and it wasn't a scrap of roach trying to save him. It never is, you know, although I tried."

"Good heavens, man," he would say to me in that keen, exuberant way of his that made him so lovable, "she's altogether adorable and charming—mean to marry her?"

"Candles don't have hearts, but only a consuming flame that burns and sears," said I. "There's only one thing you will get—singled wings. But I might as well have held my breath, for all the time he hovered round her."

"Of course it ended as I knew it would—rather worse, in fact! She laughed at him, and he said the usual things that the average brutal man says under the circumstances. The more he talked the more she laughed. 'You aren't the only moth in the world, and I cannot help it if you singe your wings,' said she."

"He turned on her then and said some dreadful things. The candle will not shine so brightly after this," was his parting words; "and there will be no other moths."

"And then he disappeared. Yes, of course, he was a young fool. He dropped his fine career, his friends, his home ties and literally flew into the air. Drives and drugs combined finished him off in less than a year. Weak-minded, did you say? Perhaps he was. But remember that the candle shone very brightly and succeeded in her great wish—the searing of his wings. He didn't care what happened after that—and she was responsible for the change."

"How did it end?" asked the Optimist quietly. "Like a Sunday school tale," said the Cynic, "with a real moral to it. I saw the beautiful little candle a few weeks after his death, but there wasn't any light left at all. I would scarcely have recognized her, for the glow had vanished and there were no more moths! One thing that she said impressed me curiously. 'A moth can singe his wings so, but the light right out of her, and that is why there never will be any other moths. Yes, I have discovered now that it is too late for me—the only man that I have ever loved!'"

TO BE IN ROXBOROUGH'S SUNDAY SCHOOL PARADE MONDAY

3000 SUNDAY SCHOOL PUPILS TO MARCH AND PICNIC IN ROXBOROUGH

Twelve Organizations, Each With Band, in 90th Yearly Outing—Manayunk Pageant to Show Historical Characters.

More than 3000 Sunday school children will march in a parade on Monday morning, at the celebration of Roxborough's 90th annual Fourth of July Sunday school picnic. The parade will start from Lupton and Manayunk avenues, at 7:45 o'clock. Twelve bands and 12 Sunday schools will be in line.

An historical parade with four floats depicting famous scenes of history and 100 famous characters will mark the Manayunk celebration. The Roxborough parade will march through the main streets until the individual Sunday schools drop out of line and go to their picnic grounds. The youngest child in the line will be Clara Adams, less than one year old, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. Rawlins Adams.

The parade will be led by Hiram L. Wynne, as chief marshal, with the following aides: William Robinson, Jr.; John Moore, Frank Carlisle, Frank Waeger, George Ehlly, William Hoedt, Harry Beale, Edward Harp, George Katzenbach, Louis Riebel, Horace McCadden and George Blumenauser.

The following Sunday schools will be in line: The Levintown Presbyterian, with the Comshookan Band; the Gailite Baptist, with the Keystone Band; the Fourth Reformed, with the Manayunk Military Band; the Roxborough Baptist, with the Falls Military Band; the Central Methodist, with Kester's Band; the Grace Lutheran, with the Wawitawam Band; the Ebenezer Methodist, with the 29th Street Methodist Band; the Epiphany Lutheran and the Talmage Memorial Reformed.

The Gailite Baptist Sunday school will hold a picnic in Bernard's Woods, Roxborough. The Bethany Lutheran will hold its outing in Righter's Woods, on the Wissahickon, while the Talmage Memorial Reformed will have its fun in Fairmount Park near the Walnut lane bridge. The other Sunday schools will march in a body to Gorgas Woods, Roxborough. No speeches or red tape ceremony will mark any of the picnics.

The Sunday schools will return at dusk to watch a wonderful display of fireworks on the Roxborough baseball grounds. The exhibition, which is provided by the city, will be in charge of C. A. Rudolph. Separate parades and picnics will be held by the Sunday schools of Manayunk. One of the largest parades will be held

Babel

In Babylon they builded a tower toward the sky; But it was not completed. There is a warning why. And the working men stopped to listen. And then they stopped to talk.

That heaven soaring tower Has crumbled quite away. And there is not a trace of it Remaining to this day.

Now gone is mirthful Babylon, With Nineveh and Tyre. And the reason you may ascertain If rightly you inquire.

What? Yes, I gave the reason For the failure and the fall In stanza one; however, That is by no means all.

For through the cities crumble And empires men forget cooled, We are the tower builders And we are talking yet.
